

In-Depth Security For Small and Midsize Business Networks

Network security is becoming an increasingly important concern for small and midsize companies. A breach in internal or external security can severely damage a company's most important operations, hampering productivity, compromising data integrity, reducing customer confidence, disrupting revenue flow, and bringing communications to a halt.

More Intrusive, More Powerful Attacks

As networks have become more inviting targets, the number of potential internal and external threats has grown. The number and variety of viruses is soaring, and viruses are spreading faster than ever as e-mail communications escalates. New, more powerful viruses are able to distribute themselves throughout an entire network infrastructure, attaching themselves to applications and data files, and even migrating between the two. Today, a sophisticated virus can spread to millions of computers via the Internet in just hours, and cost billions of dollars to clean up.
